YOUR CUSTOM TYPING CONTENT:

Many Americans view Labor Day as the unofficial "last day of summer," but this holiday is more than just barbecues and beach picnics. Labor Day became a federal holiday in 1894 after a worker's strike in Chicago shut down most of the city's transportation. President Grover Cleveland wanted to heal relations with labor groups, and as a result he established Labor Day as an official national holiday.

Fun fact: Labor Day is said to be the 3rd most popular day for grilling in the United States (#1 is the Fourth of July and #2 is Memorial Day). So this year as you enjoy your burger and beach day, remember to also celebrate the achievements of American workers!
