YOUR CUSTOM TYPING CONTENT:

Long before Europeans came to America, indigenous people (sometimes referred to as Native Americans) lived there. Native American people lived in groups called tribes or nations based on where they lived. Each tribe had its own culture with different art, food, and clothing. Some of the largest tribal nations were the Cherokee, the Navajo, and the Sioux. Today there are still 574 tribes recognized in the United States. On the second Monday in October, many people celebrate Indigenous Peoples' Day, a holiday recognizing the importance of preserving Native American culture.
