YOUR CUSTOM TYPING CONTENT:

Not only are monarch butterflies brightly colored beauties, but they are also some of the most fascinating insects around. Every year, monarchs set flight on an epic 2,000-mile migration from Canada and Northern California to Southern California and Mexico. Even more remarkable is that they return to the exact same forests every year, with some even landing on the exact same trees that their ancestors landed on many years before. If you live along the path the monarchs take, consider planting milkweed (their favorite plant) to help them along their journey!
