YOUR CUSTOM TYPING CONTENT:

Katherine Johnson was a true expert when it came to celestial navigation. Johnson always had an interest in math, and a few years after she graduated with honors from West Virginia State College, she began working at the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics (NACA). While there, she and other women on her team broke racial barriers and provided difficult calculations needed for space flight. Because of Johnson and her colleagues, astronauts such as Neil Armstrong and John Glenn were able to travel safely to and from outer space. Johnson was acknowledged for her profound contributions in the 2016 movie, "Hidden Figures."
